TO the chic Américaines the smart Parisiennes would send this message: "In Paris the toilette must possess a gracious harmony. Each aid to beauty must breathe the same French fragrance." With what confidence, then, will Madame turn to Djer-Kiss—my perfume masterpiece. With its odeur captivante have I gifted each of my spécialités—the rouges, the talc, the face powder, the sachet, the soap, the creams, the toilet water. For charme Parisien, do purchase and employ them, Madame.

JANE COWL

America's foremost actress as Cleopatra in Shakespeare's

“Antony and Cleopatra”

To Jane Cowl as Juliet

Where got you so much beauty? Sitting here
I feel the night rise round me while a rose Throbs in the darkness, and all summer near
And nearer draws and, almost, a wind blows
Across the rich night. What of light it throws,
This moonless, starless air, I know right clear
For the light only felt of dreams. The rose Dream-like, a voice has—and in dream I hear.

Oh, tremble at the words you speak, white rose—
As dew from out your petals they are shook
On the impassioned night; and we whose ears
Dream your voice, as a shell the ocean flows,
Grow faint with too much beauty, and we look
Past dew that passion must convert to tears.

The verses above, sent anonymously to Miss Cowl, were set to music by Mr. Quinto E. Maganini. Played by the orchestra in the Times Sq. Theatre at the close of the third act.
